The pase on the barque Seaton, probably utilize the inevitable redistribution of seats by The pase of the barque Seaton, probably ranked among the list of grievances on which the Thotal lased his memorable despatch of the 17th January, claiming pity for the "many hundred minochat native merchants who had been brought to ruin," through the defalcations, nominally of Chinese compradores, but, inferentially, of foreign niegohants. And it must be admitted that ha had, here, some apparent ground of complaint:

Even an English court of law has declined to recognise the validity of the hand, as far as it. Even an English court of law has declined to recognise the validity of the bond, so far as regarded the hypothecation of the cargo; and to Chinese, unacquainted with the principle of bottomy, the detention of their property must have seemed singularly unjust. That the ship should come to so condigurates, was bad enough; but that, in addition to the loss and announce sustained through this dalay, the cargo itself should be withheld from them to pay for her repairs, was an anomaly that called for vigorous protest.

Political Parkies in England.

A letter in the Times signed. A Conservative M. The impuisitive and deliberative functions of the Commons are, however, its especial attributes, distinguishing it by their excellence from all other Legislative Assemblies. They exist, and it is desirable that they should continue to exist. Without them good legislation is impossible. No one can tell like the wearer wherethe shoepinches, and no Assembly, however right-minded, can be trusted to go right unless it has within it representatives of all the classes it governs. If the American Congress treats the South with harshness, it is because no Southerner sits within the Capital; if the Corps Legislatif be ready to assist in suppressing the laws, it is because no spokesman is present to speak for those who suffer from their inequality. This, then, is that distinction between the fanctions of government and counsel which strangely enough has proved a sturibling block to projustification of the Orimulative Vote is that it scource this diversity of counsel in the Legis. lative Chamber by a process so simple as to be intelligible to all, and so equal as to be free from the danger of destruction. 1864, the computation of the author then being that it could be comprised in one thousand four hundred pages, and would occupy two years. Many unlooked for obstructions, chiefly of a typographical nature, materially retarded the progress of the work in the first instance nd these being overcome, the author dire wered mportance of the vast task be had undertaken, and that it would occupy fully double the time and spech which he had at the outset computed. The publication of a work of such magnitude, and presenting so many and such varied obstasoldom falls to the limited resources of one single individual, as occurs in this case. The first part of the work is now issued, partly at LONDON, may be Consulted at his Re. the Foreign Community of China an oppor-sidence, Castle Road. following letter from Killmallock in the county of Limerick, under date March 8th, on the Fenian riot which took place there:-Nobody who visited this dreary, povertystricken village could suppose that it was once a fortified town, that it possessed a charter, and was the chosen town-residence of Irish nobles. Of the guns four are double-barrelled, and the The wonder now is that it could ever have been worth the trouble of besieging. But its walls invited many an assailant until Crom well ordered their destruction. One can hardly assume that the Fenians wished to revive historical traditions when they marched into Killmallock last Wednesday; but if any historian thinks it worth while to record the Fenian insurrection of 1867, he must not pass over the three hours' siegs of the police-station here, and the gallant with a low wall round it, and other houses on apoken of. either side. It was held at the time of the attack by Head-constable Adams and 14 men. Here, again, the Fenian plans were divulged before Houses, Lands, Tenements, &c. night that the insurgents were coming, and that be and his men would have to fight for their lives some day during the week, probably Wednesday or Thursday. They were, therefore, prepared, though they hardly knew whether FIHE PREMISES situated at Peddar's Wharf or not to believe the stories. At a few minutes | I now occupied by Messrs. D. In front and rour the house has 26 windows, so that II of these were without defenders. The outer wall too, afforded good cover to the assailants, and efter pouring in a valley through all the windows, they got under cover at once. Their number is estimated at 200 at least, and adoordmg to some accounts they mustered twice as many. Their commander was a "Colonel" show that they were on the alart, the police be divided into two Houses. These, on the other hand, slieltered themselves as much as possible at the windows, which were soon shattered by the shot. Some attempt was made to pull down Lofty Cellars or Godowns: the house-wall at a point which was commanded . The First Floor has a large Drawing Room, a by no window, but the wall was so substantially Dining Room of the same size, two Parlours, a built that they gave up this attempt also. From Storeroom and Bathroom: four of their wives and 13 children. These Theodut Offic were placed, in as safe positions as could be found, but, each room baving its window, there was dancer in all. Nor could the children be alway- kept in the safest place in the room. Some were old enough to be frightened; therest played about during the attack, and "just took. their chance." I went through the hon e to-day, and the numerous bullet-holes in the plaster and shutters proved how serious a risk this was. One man showed me where he stood and fired, his wife and five children crouching down behind him; and a dozen bullets at least unust have passed not many inches above his head. A considerable number of the Fenjane were townspeople, who knew exactly the construction of the barrack, and which room might best be fired into. Thus, the head-constable's room was a favourite target, and at the window here. commanding the back-door, Mr. Adams planted himself. His most pertinacious enemy was a Militiuman, whom he recognized, and who fired from the cover of a house close by, or from the low wall around the barrack. One of this man's. bullets smeshed the washband basin, and the head constable made very pretty practice in neturn, splintering the wall now and then close by the head of his antagonist. The police fired [on an average 13 or 20 rounds per man. One and all behaved splondidly, though some had not been more than six months in the force. There was no flinching and no talk of surrender. "They whistled and joked most of the time." one of the women told me, "and this kept us up too." The fathers new and then would go to see extensive Godowns attached. that their wives and little ones were unharmed; now and then, too, mothers could not be prevented from running into danger, that they might know their husbands were not struck down. Only one policeman was hit by a musket-ball and the wound was a mere graze. Some three hours passed in this way, and Mesars, MARGESSON & Co.

brought no help. None of the townspeople seem to have sent for any. Many, indeed, as I have said, were in the Fenian ranks, and the tost were too thmid to venture on doing anything for the relief of the little garrison. Meanwhile, a mounted policeman, bringing desputches from Brough, had been explained by the Fonians. A pike was put in his hand, and he was forced to go towards the barrack to aid in the attack under threats of being shot if he refused. But the policeman, of course, did not feel bound to expose himself to fire any more than his captors, and found means to escape sifterwards. Meanwhile, the Fenian Colonel, finding the attack languish, exhorted his men to "go in," he himself smoking a short pipe comfortably all the time behind a wall where he was perfectly safe. He also wrote despatches, using the step of a juunting ear for a desk. These missives, which are supposed to have contained demands for reinforcements, were sent into the country by messengers mounted on horses taken from the neighbouring farmers or gentry. the policeman's horse being, of course, pressed into the service. Dunns also found time to shoot Mr. Bourne, the manager of the Union Bank. He called at this gentleman's private residence and demanded a revolver. Mr. Bourne refused, saying that he should want it for the defence firing at the end of the street, and know that apply to relief was at hand. It reached them in this wise :- Sub-inspector Milling happened to be coming to Killmallock with three policemen in the mail car from Kilfillanc. At a short distance from the town he heard firing, and THE OFFICE and GODOWN situated a was told that an attack was being made upon the barrack. He at once ordered the driver of the mail cart to turn back to a police station shout six miles off, and returned with ten men. It was now about 9 o'clock, and the Killmallock constabulary still gallantly held their own. The sub-inspector, with his small party, took the insurgents in flank and fired n voltey upon them before they were aware that any new fee was nigh. At the same ton, Rice, Coals, and other Merchandise time, the new comers cheered lustily to give in their own Boats, and to receive the same on notice to their comrades in the barrack; and blorage in first class GRANITE GODOWNS the head-constable there at once ordered the on moderate terms. door to be thrown open, and, joining Milling's party, dashed into the road in pursuit to Hongkong, 4th Morch, 1867. of the retiring Feniana.
